PANELIST BIOS:

Jessica Vandenberghe, P.Eng., M.Sc. is Dene Tha born and raised in a very inclusive German family in northern Alberta. She has had an exceptional career based on her two engineering degrees from the University of Alberta and has worked in the oil sands, mining, regulatory, infrastructure, and consulting industries. She is an Indigenous Professional Engineer, Industrial Professor, and the Assistant Dean (Outreach) at the Faculty of Engineering at the University of Alberta. She also has her own consulting firm, Guiding Star Consulting where she contributes to Truth and Reconciliation, acting as a bridge to Indigenous communities, talks to Calls to Action implementation, and works on TRC awareness. She is a mother of two and is passionate about equity, diversity and inclusion. She sits on many boards and Councils, walks in many governance worlds, and does her best to contribute to the development of well-rounded and ethically minded engineering students who will ultimately build strong and vibrant communities within Canada.

Nicole Hancock: Nicole has worked for Safe Drinking Water Foundation (SDWF) since 2006 in increasing levels of responsibility. SDWF has sent water testing kits to over 3000 different schools across Canada since 2001. SDWF's mission is to educate the leaders of today and tomorrow about drinking water quality issues to realize our goal of safe drinking water being available to every Canadian. When Nicole is not working for Safe Drinking Water Foundation, she can be found working for two other water organizations, teaching math and French, or writing educational courses for online learners. She has also worked for The Saskatchewan First Nations Water Association Inc. (SFNWA) since early 2019. The mission of SFNWA is to build capacity at the community level for the care and control of water on reserve. Tasha Beeds: Tasha is an Indigenous scholar of nêhiyaw (Plains Cree), Scottish-Metis, and Caribbean ancestry from the Treaty 6 territories of Saskatchewan. She activates as a kôhkom (Grandmother), Water Walker, and a Mide-Kwe from Minweyweywigaan Midewiwin Lodge situated in Roseau River First Nations and Wiikwemkoong Unceded Reserve. She belongs to the Makwa (Bear) Clan and is a traditional daughter to Daabaasanaqwat (Peter Atkinson). Tasha's collective work highlights and celebrates Indigeneity while promoting Indigenous nationhood, sovereignty, and care and protection of the land and waters based on carrying Indigenous Ancestral legacies forward for future generations. She was selected as a Na'ah Illahee Sovereign Futures Indigenous Environmental Leader and supported by the NdN Collective for her movement as a Water Walker. Tasha is currently a limited term lecturer at the University of Saskatchewan Indigenous Studies Department; the Ron Ianni guest scholar at the University of Windsor's Indigenous Legal Orders Institute; the inaugural Indigenous scholar at Carleton University's Anako Indigenous Research Institute; and an adjunct faculty member at Kenjgewin Teg/Queen's University. <https://linktr.ee/SaskRiverWaterWalk> livingwaterwalk@gmail.com

Patricia Crowe: Patricia A Crowe Communications Consultant, Advisor, Advocate

As a Nêhiyaw/Métis woman from Northern Saskatchewan, Patricia consults, advises and advocates with two-eyed seeing, knowing and doing, representing Indigenous women on global, national, provincial and grassroots platforms.

Patricia Crowe is the Co-Chair of Saskatchewan Indigenous Economic Development Network and works with Morris Interactive Ltd. as a Senior Consultant. Sharing her lived experience, wisdom and knowledge, Patricia works directly with First Nations and Métis organizations and communities within Treaty 6 territory.

Her collective leadership experience includes project management, coordinating strategy, facilitating and moderating online and in-person workshops & forums and she actively adds her voice to webinars, social media live events on economic development and social issues. She mentors, guides and helps women to connect with opportunities that nurture their passions.
